Pappas, Panayiotis. A. 2004. Variation and morphosyntactic change in Greek. from clitics to affixes. Hampshire, New York: Palgrave McMillan. Philippaki-Warburton, Irene & Vassilios Spyropoulos. 1999. On the boundaries of inflection and syntax: Greek pronominal clitics and particles. In Booij, Geert & Jaap Van Marle (eds.), The Yearbook of Morphology 1998, 45-72. Dordrecht: Kluwer.

Παππού-Ζουραβλιόβα, Αικατερίνη. 1998. Μορφολογία των νεοελληνικών ιδιωμάτων της Ουκρανίας. Οι αντωνυμίες και η ταξινόμισή τους στην ταυροπουμαίικη διάλεκτο των Ελλήνων της Μαριούπολης σε σύγκριση με τη νέα ελληνική.

12.30-13.00 Prepositional genitives in Northern Greek beyond suppletion

Chatzikyriakidis Stergios[1], Dimitris Michelioudakis[2] & Giorgos Spathas[3]
University of Gothenburg[1], University of York[2] & HU Berlin[3]

In a number of Greek dialects, prepositional phrases headed by apo 'from' are used as genitive substitutes, with their distribution usually being morphologically conditioned: inflectional genitives and PP genitives are in complementary distribution, with the latter serving as suppletive forms filling paradigmatic gaps, e.g. plural genitives (Kavakli/Eastern Rumelia and most Northern Greek varieties) or genitives of non-bisyllabic nouns (Roumoukliotika/Imathia) and of unassimilated loan- words (Italiot/Calabria Greek, Katsoyannou 1996). This paper investigates genitives in the varieties of Grevena and Kozani, in which the prepositional realisation has been extended well beyond cases of suppletion and has become possible for all NPs (with the possible exception of proper names), in all contexts where an inflectional genitive is allowed. While apo-PPs are usually favoured as genitive substitutes when the context is compatible with a source or partitive interpretation of the adnominal argument, in the varieties in question apo-PPs can support the full range of relations typically expressed through inflectional genitives:

(1) tu vivliu ap tun dhimarxu (Grevena Greek)
the book APO the mayor
'the book brought/owned/written/assigned by the mayor'

SOURCE/POSSESSION-CONTROL (cf.Barker 2008)/AUTHOR/PRAGMATIC R-relation

(2) Fotografies ap ts pethamen' ts dimarxei THEME pictures APO the dead the mayors
'pictures of(=depicting) the dead mayors'

Moreover, apo-genitives are iterable and, when iterated, ambiguous with respect to theta-assignment:

(3) i perigrafi ap tun dhimarxu ap ta pidja
the description APO the mayor APO the children
'the mayor's description of children/(?)the children's description of the mayor'

cf. *I perigrafi tu Jani tu atiximatos

At the same time, when co-occurring with another genitive argument realised by a different, structurally higher, form, e.g. a possessive pronoun, a strict thematic hierarchy (of the form 'Possessor>Agent>Theme') seems to be respected: a structurally lower genitive argument cannot take up a theta-role which is higher in the hierarchy than the role of the higher argument:

(4) i diki m fotografia ap tun dhimarxu
the own my picture APO the mayor
I=possessor,mayor=author/I=possessor,mayor=theme/I=author, mayor=theme
*I=author, mayor=possessor/*I=theme, mayor=possessor (the 'source' interpretation for the apo-PP is also independently available).

We argue that the varieties in question have fully developed a prepositional genitive system, alongside inflectional genitives, possessive pronouns etc., akin to prepositional genitives familiar from languages such as Romance/Bulgarian, and analysable as so-called 'free genitives' (Longobardi & Silvestri 2013), as opposed to the non-iterable, postnominal/post- adjectival 'functional' genitive of SMG (L&S's (2013) 'GenO'). Analysing more closely the landscape of variation, considering grammars with different degrees of Standard Modern Greek interference, as well as older written data documenting the variety of Kozani (Christodoulou 2015) we argue for a possible diachronic path which, if uninterrupted/unaffected by SMG, would/might give rise to the prevalence of the prepositional realisation, with GenO being only residual (namely restricted to proper names), in a way reminiscent of the history of Romance genitives and of the synchronic situation in certain S.Italian dialects (cf. Silvestri 2013)

14.30-15.00 Cappadocian in the Social Media Era

Janse Mark
Ghent University

Until very recently, Cappadocian Greek seemed to have disappeared without a trace. Linguists and dialectologists even believed it had become extinct altogether. However, one Cappadocian variety, Mišótika, is still spoken in some villages and towns in the decentralized administrations of Macedonia and Thrace, Epirus and Western Macedonia, and Thessaly and Central Greece. The dialect is undergoing attrition under the growing pressure of Standard Modern Greek and its regional varieties and is actually being re-Hellenized. Even the oldest speakers make free use of Greek instead of Misiótika words and expressions and attrition is noticeable in at the phonological, morphological and syntactic levels. As a result, there are now many semi- or even would-be speakers whose speech is located somewhere on a continuum from Mišótika with Standard or Regional Modern Greek elements in it to Standard or Regional Modern Greek with Mišótika elements in it - in both cases mostly words and phrases. Over the past ten years, we have witnessed a growing interest in Mišótika as a marker of (Mišótika) Cappadocian identity. Speakers feel more confident to speak their language in public, for instance at the annual Gavoustima, where theatrical plays in Mišótika are now regularly performed by the syllogos of Néo Agionéri (to the amusement and also to bewilderment of the audience). Remarkably and very fortunately, Mišótika is now also used in the Social Media. I will concentrate here on Facebook, especially on the page called Έναρξη Διδασκαλίας Εκμάθησης Μυστιώτικου Ιδιώματος (group 470281169768316 on FB). The title is identical with the subtitle of Thomas Fates' book Χιο̯γός α ας χαρίσ̆', which is some sort of "Teach Yourself Mišótika" and in which, interestingly, a special orthography for Mišótika has been developed. I will discuss the kind of information found on the FB page: questions, questionnaires, explanations of words and short phrases, folktales and other short stories, audio & video clips etc. Particular attention will be paid to the problems of using the Greek alphabet to write Mišótika in relation to the ongoing phonological attrition and also to the insecurity when it comes to interpretation linguistic phenomena in Mišótika.